Customer Reviews

I'll get this out of the way at the beginning- I know Matt Paulson personally. One of the things I like about him is that he's not your typical Tony Robbins or Tim Ferriss-esque self-help author. He's not tall. He's not handsome. He's not extroverted. He kinda looks like a turtle and talks with a whiny, nasally voice. But when I meet him, I never feel like I'm being hustled for anything. He's the most ordinary entrepreneur-next-door you'll ever meet, and puts everything in the plainest language possible. Matt is my new business guru of choice; like Warren Buffett, he's so terminally uncool he's cool. Whenever a friend or family member graduates from high school or college, my usual graduation gift is a personal finance book- typically Ramit Sethi's now classic I Will Teach You To Be Rich. But Ramit's book always seemed to have a few gaps in it, generally only covering the nuts and bolts of what to do with your paychecks (not to mention an extreme disdain for financial advisors, which was a turnoff for me, coming from that profession). The other option I'd usually consider, The 4-Hour Work Week: Escape the 9-5, Live Anywhere and Join the New Rich, falls to the other extreme- it's very inspiring and creative and tends to revolutionize how it's readers look at their income, career and work-life balance, but doesn't have the nuts and bolts guidance that Sethi's book provides, and can promote some unrealistic thinking about how simple some of the suggested solutions might be to implement.
