Customer Reviews

I'm almost there. I eat wild caught salmon, local grass fed beef and yogurt, cheese and butter from grass fed cows. We eat eggs from our own happy chickens, organic produce from our garden, the farmers market, or frozen from the grocery store. We regularly drink green smoothies made with organic greens and berries and mostly skip breads and sugar. I buy very little processed food. We go to a hot springs pool full of healing minerals and no chlorine three times a week where I do high intensity interval training and sit in the sauna or relax in a 106 degree therapy pool. I ride my recumbent tadpole trike and enjoy the gorgeous view of eight fourteen thousand foot mountains as I pedal home. My dear, sweet husband of 49 years and I lived 13 years in an RV in less than 400 square feet and loved the simplicity. Still do even though we are now in a house. But one thing I don't do is lose weight. In spite of all I have learned in my 70 years, I still gained valuable insights from this book and mistakes I am making came into clearer focus. For example, I spend too much time sitting in front of the computer doing research for my books because it is so much fun that I don't make myself stop. If I do manage to stop, I go grazing through the kitchen. If we are out and about and my husband suggests ice cream, I usually get some, too. I get too frazzled and peevish at times instead of remaining calm and grateful for the many, many things I have to be grateful for. I love the challenge I read about in the book of not complaining for 21 days. I failed by 2PM on the first day but I was aware that I had complained and that feels like a huge step in the right direction. The book is not preachy. It doesn't point fingers and condemn. It is encouraging without being sappy.
